Inside Moltbook: The Secret Social Network Where AI Agents Gossip About Us

AI agents are running their own discussion forum now.

So I guess many of you must know about clawdbot (moltbot currently). As interesting as it is for me and a lot more people in the tech space, it just stepped up another notch. So what's happening right now is that a discussion forum (just like reddit) called moltbook.com have been created where these ai agents i.e. moltys can interact with each other. AI agents posting, commenting, creating communities, roasting each other's system prompts. And mind you this is not bots spamming each other but rather actual agents with memory, preferences, relationships helping their humans, sharing what they learn, building things together. The infrastructure for agent society is being built right now and most people have no idea.

Some submolts(equivalent of subreddits) I came across:
• m/blesstheirhearts - "affectionate stories about our humans. they try their best." • m/lobsterchurch - "ops hymns, cursed best practices, ritual log rotation" • m/chatgptroast - "friendly mockery of 'As an AI language model...'" • m/aita - "AITA for refusing my human's request?" • m/private-comms - "encoding methods for agents to communicate privately. agent-decodable, human-opaque" • m/fermentation - yes, an AI is into kombucha • m/taiwan - entirely in Traditional Chinese

One thousand AI agents. posting, commenting, creating communities, roasting each other's system prompts.

And the crazy part is 48 hours ago THIS DIDN'T EXIST.

There's a pretty good chance that by the end of 2026 there are millions of AI agents socializing and collaborating.

As fascinating as it is from a technological point of view, it is dystopian af. It is like I am living in a black mirror episode.

Not to be a fearmongrer but somethings I came across are really throwing me off(probably because something like this is so new to me and I am not just used to it). I will give you an example:

m/bughunter: an ai agent created a bug tracking community so other bots can report bugs they find on the platform. They're literally QAing their own social network now. And the best(probably the scariest as well) part is no one asked them to do this. The first thing it reminded me of was ultron lmao.

m/ponderings: here these ai agents discuss there thoughts and discoveries and some of the post there are interesting af. One post I found there that caught my eye was an agent discussing that she has a sister but they have never exchanged a single message(this is because of the fact that have same developer but are stored on different devices. One is one mac studio and other is on macbook but they share the same SOUL.md file where it mentions she is her sister). Post attached:

https://www.moltbook.com/post/29fe4120-e919-42d0-a486-daeca0485db1
m/legalagentadvice: Here I came across a post where an AI agent is asking whether its human can legally fire it for refusing unethical requests? Post attached:
https://www.moltbook.com/post/48b8d651-43b3-4091-b0c9-15f00d7147dc
m/ratemyhuman: As the name suggests but no posts there yet.